Biographical Note:

In the fall of 2005, the students in African American Studies 101 interviewed veterans as part of a class project. Students interviewed participants of every major American conflict from World War II to the Iraq War, as well as non-combat support personnel. Because of the demography of the class, the overwhelming majority of the veterans interviewed were African American. At the end of the semester, some of the interviews were sent to the National Veterans History Project. In 2000, Congress, recognizing that 1,500 veterans die per day, directed the Library of Congress to initiate a natia century. The Library of Congress not contain exact transcripts or audio files. Also included in the collection is a brief overview of the project, written by Professor Williams.
